Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The study included 600 male employees from a large manufacturing company who had been employed for at least one year. They were divided into three groups based on their job type: manual laborers, machine operators, and office workers. Data were collected through self-administered questionnaires and interviews. Results showed that manual laborers had the highest prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders, followed by machine operators, and then office workers. This suggests that physical demands are a significant factor in the development of these disorders.

The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the car was the cold, crisp air. It felt like a fresh blanket after a long, hot summer. I took a deep breath, savoring the scent of pine and the distant sound of water. The landscape was breathtaking, a mix of rugged mountains and lush green valleys. I had heard that the scenery was incredible, and now I knew why. Every turn of the road revealed a new, stunning view. The sun was just setting, painting the sky in shades of orange and pink. I found a small, quiet spot to park and decided to take a short hike. The path was well-maintained and led through a dense forest of tall, ancient trees. The ground was covered in a thick layer of fallen leaves, and the air was filled with the soft rustle of branches. As I walked, I noticed a small stream flowing through the forest, its water clear and cold. I stopped for a moment, leaning against a large tree trunk and looking down at the water. The sound of the stream was soothing, a gentle reminder of nature's beauty. I continued my hike, enjoying the solitude and the peace of the wilderness. The sun had set, and the stars were beginning to appear in the dark sky. I reached a small clearing and decided to sit on a log, watching the night unfold. The fireflies were out, their tiny lights twinkling in the darkness. The moon was a thin crescent, hanging low in the sky. I felt a sense of wonder and awe, knowing that I was in a place so beautiful and so far from the hustle and bustle of everyday life. I stayed there for a while, lost in thought and the beauty of the night. Finally, I heard the sound of a car engine, and I knew it was time to go. I got up, brushed off my pants, and walked back to the car. The drive home was quiet, with only the sound of the engine and the occasional chirp of a bird. I thought about the hike and the beauty of the night, feeling a sense of peace and contentment. I knew that I would never forget this experience, and I was grateful for the chance to see it all.
